

Harry M. Davis

Economist, North Carolina Bankers Association • Professor of Finance, Appalachian State University

Harry Davis is the Professor of Banking (1980) and Economist (1981) for the North Carolina Bankers Association. He is professor of Finance and past Chair (1981-1998) of the Department of Finance, Banking, and Insurance at Appalachian State University. As the North Carolina Bankers Association Economist, Harry puts together quarterly economic forecasts that are carried by various news outlets. He is frequently interviewed throughout the year by newspapers, television, and radio stations for stories on the economy and banking. Harry is a frequent speaker at state, regional and national banking conventions on economic and banking issues.

Harry is the Dean of and serves as an instructor for the North Carolina School of Banking. He is also an instructor for the Director's College sponsored by the North Carolina Commissioner of Banks and the FDIC and serves as an instructor for the North Carolina Insurance Executive Management School and the South Carolina School of Banking. Harry is active in the consulting field and has presented seminars to business groups both in North Carolina and nationwide. He puts together feasibility plans, business plans and valuations for both financial and nonfinancial corporations. Harry has served as a consultant for numerous start-up banks in North Carolina. He received his BS in economics from UNC Chapel Hill, his MA in economics from Vanderbilt University and his Ph.D in finance from the University of Georgia.